In the ten years since the Supreme Court decided District of Columbia v. Heller, Second Amendment issues have remained at the forefront of American political, legal, and social discourse. State and Federal justice systems have wrestled with questions about the scope of the Second Amendment, the appropriate standard of review, and the proper balance between regulating and respecting one’s right to keep and bear arms.

This symposium takes up these questions, examining current issues surrounding the Second Amendment as well as its history and potential future through a series of panels. Participants will discuss the roots of the Second Amendment within its historical context, the proper standard of review for Second Amendment cases, the place firearms have in American culture, and the intersection of the Second Amendment with other amendments in the Constitution. Participants will focus, in particular, on the role Heller has had on the development of Second Amendment law and where, within this precedent, the law may develop from here.
