Generally, Summer Associates who have completed their second year of law school are assigned to a specific Practice Group, and receive work assignments from attorneys in that group. On the other hand, Summer Associates who have completed their first year of law school are typically part of our "General Pool." Those Summer Associates will receive work from a variety of Practice Groups, so they have the opportunity to explore those areas of law that might appeal to them most. Certainly, we value the ability to deliver accurate and concise research memoranda; however, also we believe our Summer Associates should learn to address the practical problems our clients face. We consider our Summer Associates to more than just students, who are working at the firm temporarily - they become involved in the daily fabric of our practice, and are encouraged to become a part of the Greensfelder team. Typically, our Summer Associates enjoy the opportunity to interact with clients, under the guidance of our experienced attorneys. They also attend meetings, depositions, hearings, and closings, side-by-side with the attorneys they work with. In short, by the end of a summer, our Summer Associates have an accurate and thorough picture of what it is like to practice law as an associate at Greensfelder.
